

Provisional Individual Members 2016-2019

The Provisional Individual Members presented have all satisfied the criteria set out in the Constitution and the more stringent criteria listed in the Router Handbook which have been approved by the Executive Committee of the IAAP. These criteria include a minimum of 240 hours of personal analysis with an IAAP analyst and a minimum of 100 hours of supervision. The routers have also to have successfully passed the intermediate examination and the final examination both carried out by experienced IAAP analysts.

The intermediate exam is a mid-point examination meant to evaluate the routers' grasp of basic Jungian principles and their ability to begin to apply and understand them in the work with patients. This exam can usually be taken after the router has had about 100 hours of personal analysis and 50 hours of supervision. The router must have completed all the yearly self-evaluation and the router information forms and submitted the yearly supervision evaluation forms.

In preparation for the exam, the router is asked to write a paper of around 5,000 words on a Jungian concept of their choice showing clinical application of this concept. The written paper must be submitted to the Regional Organizer no later than one month before the scheduled exam. The intermediate exam is an oral examination of 1 – 1½ hour half based on the written paper but not limited to the paper only. Examiners are encouraged to explore and evaluate the router's knowledge and grasp of basic Jungian principles and need not focus exclusively on the concept presented in the written paper.

Routers are eligible to take the final exam when they have completed a minimum of 240 hours of personal analysis and 100 hours of supervision with IAAP analysts. Supervision evaluation reports submitted by the supervisors must support the router's request to take the final exam. The router must have completed all the yearly self-evaluations and the router information forms and submitted the yearly supervision evaluation forms.

In preparation for the final exam, the router must submit a case report of minimum 15,000 and maximum 20,000 words based on an analytic case which has been under supervision with an IAAP analyst for at least two years. It is important to note that this case report is meant to show the router's grasp and understanding of the analytic process as it has evolved over time. It is not meant to be an exercise in creativity. The router is expected to apply theory to practice and to show their integration of the principles of Jungian psychology in their clinical work. It is expected that the router is aware of, and can work with, the interpersonal dynamics as well as intrapsychic dynamics in the clinical work. The router should demonstrate an understanding of a range of analytical approaches to the patient and be able to demonstrate a capability to think critically about theory. The router should be able to compare ideas whilst showing his or her own particular preferences so the paper is not just a restatement of what others have already said. The paper should adhere to strict academic standards. References and footnotes should comply with the standards required for publication. Literature that is not quoted from or mentioned directly in the text of the article should not be included in the reference list.

The written case report will be submitted to the Regional Organizer no later than one month before the scheduled exam. The final exam is an oral examination which lasts about two hours. The final exam will be given by two senior IAAP analysts, appointed by the Regional Organizer.
